Crawford Surveying Services now accredited by Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors

LONDON – Crawford & Company’s Surveying Services has enhanced its professional credentials after registering with one of the UK’s most recognised property institutions. The Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors (RICS) has specifically accredited Crawford Surveying Services (CSS), reflecting the very high level of expertise within the CSS team and Crawford’s effort to offer clients additional services by expanding into traditional building surveying.

CSS is now authorised to carry the RICS logo in its dealings with customers and the public, and it will be directed by Iain Salkeld, a Chartered Building Surveyor with two decades of experience in the building surveying and insurance market. The new accreditation is supplementary to and does not replace the regulation of CSS by the Financial Conduct Authority.

Alex Finch, Specialist Property Services Director at Crawford, noted the importance of RICS registration: “We are very pleased to have CSS recognised by the RICS. This further emphasises the quality of our building surveying operation which has grown steadily in recent years, supported by a growing demand for linked surveying and insurance services across the market.”

CSS provides a fully integrated surveying service offering an effective solution for managing larger or complex property damage claims. Crawford Surveying Services enhances customer service, manages building reinstatement more quickly and reduces expenditure on larger claims. CSS have specialists in fire and flood repairs, drainage surveys, disaster restoration, Party Wall issues, planning and Building Regulations.
